While Slavery had been notically abolished already by some of the emancipating states, several of them, owing to a great charge in the relative value of the productions of clare into, had fallen off into the class of non-camon-pating State; and now the whole family of Slavie was divided and classified as slaveholding or state States, and non-laveholding or free

The contest between them has been only protracted, not decided. It is a great feature in our mational Flereafter. So the question of adhering to or abrogating this Compromise is no immensing issue, and no contest of mere blind passion now. To adhere, is to secure the occupation by freemen with free labor, of a region in the very centre of the Cominent, capable of sustaining, and in that areat destined, though it may be only after a far distant period, to sustain ten, twenty, thirty, forty millions of people, and their successive generations forever!

To abrogate, is to resign all that vast region to chances which mortal vision cannot fully forese; perhaps to the sovereignty of such stinted and short lived communities as those of which Mexico and South America and the West India Islands present us with examples; perhaps to convert that region into the scone of long and desolating conflicts between not merely races, but castes, to end, like a similar conflict in Egypt, in a convalsive examples; perhaps, like one not dissipular in Spain, in the forcible expolsion of the inferior race, exhausting the State by the sudden and complete suppression of a great resource of not compound of 1820. Then that is a reason, not erations foreser in Spain, in the forcible expolsion of the inferior race, exhausting the State by the studen and complete suppression of a great resource of national wealth and labor; perhaps in the disastrous expulsion, even, of the superior race itself, by a people too suddenly raised from slavery to liberty, as in St. Domingo.

To adhere is to secure forever the presence here, after some lapse of time, of two, four, ten, twenty, or more Senators, and of Representatives in larger proportions, to uphold the policy and interests of the non-slaveholding States, and balance that ever-increasing representation of slaveholding States, which past experience and the decay of the Spanish American States, admonish us has only just begun; to save what the non-slaveholding States boy in to save what the non-slaveholding States for site of the capital and federal institutions in the slaveholding States; to save against any danger from adverse or hostile policy, the culture, the manufactures, and the commerce, as well as tho just influence and weight of the national principles of the slaveholding States. To adhere, is to save, to the unn-slaveholding States, as well as to he slaveholding States, as well as to the slaveholding States, and in every event, a right of way and free communication across the consts, and with the States on the Pacific coasts, and with the risine States on the Pacific coasts, and with the fisher States on the landscands. continent, to and with the States on the Pacific coasts, and with the rising States on the islands in the South Sea, and with all the eastern nations on the vast continent of Asia.

To abrogate, on the contrary, is to commit all these precious interests to the chances and lazards of embarrasament and injury by legislation under the influence of social, political, and commercial jealousy and rivalry; and in the event of secession of the slaveholding States, which is so often threatened in their name, but I thank Gor without their authority, to give to a servile population a La Vendee at the very sources of the Mississippi, and in the very recesses of the Rocky Mountains.

What if the spirit, or even the letter, of the Compromise laws of 1850 aid conflict with the Compromise of 1820? What if the letter or the spillt of the Compromise of 1850 did superseds or impair or even conflict with the Compromise of 1820? Then that is a reason, not for abrogating the irrepealable and inviolable Compromise of 1820, but the spurious and pretended Compromise of 1850.

Mr. President, why is this reason for the proposed altrogation of the Compromise of 1820 assigned in these bills at all? It is unnecessary. The assignment of a reason adds nothing to the force or weight of the abrogation isself. Either the fact altered as a reason is free or it is not true. incre or weight of the arrogation ised. Either the fact alleged as a reason is frie or it is not true. If it be untrue, your asserting it here will not make it true. If it be true, it is apparent in the text of the law of 1850, without the aid of legislative exposition now. It is unusual. It is unparaliamentary. The language of the lawsiver, whether the sovereign be Democratic, Rapublican, or Despotic, is always the same. It is mandatory, imperative. If the lawsiver explains at all in a statute the reason for it, the reason is that it is his pleasure—sio volo, sic jubso. Look at the Compromise of 1820. Does it plead an excuse for its commands? Look at the Compromise of 1850, drawn by the master hand of our American Chatham. Does that bespeak your favor by a quibbling or shuffling apology? Look at your own, now rejected, first Nebreska bill, which, hy conclusive implication, saved the effect of the Missouri Compromise. Look at any other bill ever reported by the Committee on Territories. Look at any other bill now in your calendar. Examine all the laws on your statute books. Do you find any one bill or statue which ever came bowing, stooping, and wriggling into the Senare, pleading an axing for its Alexan and explicit dethe fact alleged as a reason is true or it is not true.

The departure from this habit in this solitary case bettrys self-distruct, and an attempt on the part of the bill to divert the public attention, to raise complex and immaterial issues, to perplex and bewilder and confound the people by whom this transaction is to be reviewed. Look again at the profile in the property of the people of t this transaction is to be reviewed. Look again at the vacillation betrayed in the frequent changes of the structure of this rpology. At first the recital told us that the eighth section of the Compromise of 1820 was supersected by the principles of the Compromise laws of 1850—as if any one had ever heard of a supersectes of one-local law by the mere principles of another local law, enacted for an attogether different region, thirty years afterwards. On another day we were told, by an amendment of the recital, that the Compromise of 1820 was not supersected by the Compromise of 1820 was not supersected by the Compromise of 1820 was not superseded by the Octa-promise of 1820 at all, but was only "incensis-int with "it—ns if a local act which was Irre-pealable was now to be abrogated, because it was Milwaukee Daily Sentinel. equity, and honor, abrogate the guarantee of freedom in Nebraska.

There is still another and not less serious difficulty. You call the Slavery laws of 1859 a Compromise between the slaveholding and non-slaveholding States. For the purpose of this argument, let it be granted that they were such a compromise. It was nevertheless a compromise concerning Slavery in the Territories acquired from Mexico, and by the letter of the compromise it extended no further. Can you now, by an act which is not a compromise between the same parties, but a mere ordinary law, extend the force and obligation of the principles of that Compromise of 1850 into regions not only excluded from it, but absolutely protected from your intervention there by a solumn Compromise of thirty years' duration, and invested with a sanctity scarcely inferior to that which hallows the Constitution itself?

Stitution itself?

Oan the Compromise of 1850, by a were ordinary act of logislation, be extended beyond the plain, known, fixed intent and understanding of the parties at the time that contract was made, and yet be binding on the parties to it, not merely legally, but in honor and conscience? Can you abrogate a compromise by passing any aw of less dignity than a compromise? If so, of what railue is any one or the whole of the Compromise? Thus you see that these bills violate both of the Compromises—hot more that of 1820 than that of 1850. ditution itself?

Madison, Feb. 22, '54. Editors of the Sentinel : Mr. Ryan's oration in honor of the birthday of Washington, came off at eleven o'clock this morning. Notwithstanding the limited notice given, the Assembly Hall was crowded with members of both houses, State officers, citizens and strangers. As Mr. R. approached the speaker's chair, he requested the reporters not to report him, as he had had so little notice that he did not expect to draw business to particular establishments to say anything worthy of the occasion. that some men were so full of thought that they could speak without time to elaborate and arrange their thoughts; but he made no pretensions to such powers? [A few friends, to whose kindness he owed so much that he could refuse them nothing called on him at a late hour the evening previous and requested him to address them on this occasion, and he had consented to present them with such thoughts as might occur to him Human history, he said, was not a mere story, but a great, and deep, and solema lesson. He spoke of the nature and capability of man, and ry, or other free territory. After something of of the progressive development of the human mind and his efforts to shape his own destiny, and of a Providence, as he religiously believed, presiding high over that destiny and controlling t according to his own pleasure. Man was created a free and accountable agent, and without that freedom which his Creator had bestowed upon him, he could never fulfill his true destiny.

The orator glauced at the political state of Europe, during the 3d quarter of the last century. Royalty had attempted to usurp the place of Providence, and blasphemously assume to control the destinies of the race, and all the world bound down in worship to despots. There was a coma portion of Mr. Seward's speech on the Ne- picte apostacy of humanity to the damnable gotism of royalty. But high above the whole rowd of despots and slaves, there was still a Perry, of Albany: crowd of despots and slaves, there was still a guiding and controlling Providence. Again, the speaker glanced back at history, to show that just at the auspicious time, America was discovered and slowly planted with colonies, which covered and slowly planted with colonies, which guide and guide an guiding and controlling Providence. Again, the covered and slowly planted with colonies, which for a long period were regarded as of little con-sequence except as balances to the powers of Europe. Yet here providence was working out the overthrow of royalty. He would not nitempt | 1 to say what would have been the result if the contest with royalty had at that time taken place on European soil. He would only point to the first French revolution, which was baptised in blood, and so far as human penetration could

The American revolution presented one sail solitary instance of treachery, and but one He would refer to the French revolution as a speci men of what revolutions were in other countries. So frought were they with bloodshed, treachery and usurpation, that the stontest hearts shrun from them with horror, that it was reserved to America, under the guidance of Washington, to present the anomaly of a civilized revolution. What revolution could boast of such a leader ?-A here without ambition-a conqueror without resurpation or oppression-"first in war, first n peace, and first in the hearts of his country-not be claimed exclusively by Americans. He was too great to be contained in the hearts of his countrymen above. He was the boon of God to map. What was he this day to the nations of the earth? Go to Italy, go to Austria-to Russia, and even to poor Ireland, ground down by the hell of British oppression, and George Washing-ton was the political saint of the nations. He had emancipated them from the mental thraldom which held them in allegiance to Royalty, and they had now only to break the physical chains which tyrants had thrown around them, and as they rose to the mighty task, the heart of humanity would throb with hope at the sound of his name; for the day would come when the great heart of homanity would gather up its strength and burst its bands like a willow reed. The orator spoke eloquently of the legacy left us by the Revolutionests and of our duty to understand its nature and extent, and to appreciate olution, in their baptism of blood, were our sponsors that we should trausmit it unalloyed and unturnished to our children, and so long as we teach our children to keep holy the Sabbath day, so long should we teach them to keep truly and appropriately the birth day of Washington." The defendant's witnesses showed a different and of facts. It as peared that there was a ball at the Mannon House—the defendant and complantant were standing near the counter-com-plantant was drunk-and that he took hold of defendent to wrestle with him—both seemed good natured-defendant threw complainant, and that after that, complainant again took hold of defend ant, and that complainent was again thrown, his head coming in contact with the window, is which his head was cut. The court remarked that the testimony was of the coefficing a nature to warrant a conviction; the case was one of those that had grown out of a scuttle, a state of things much to be deprecated; the testimony showed that the parties were the were for liquor, and their memories might be little treacherous. The finding of the court would be not guilty.

A man named Patrick Delaney was brought up by constable Neumon, charged with assault and battery upon John Peters. The defendant plesded guilty. A witness was called to show the usture of the ease, who stated that the complainant went for a pag, and that while at defendant's horne, defendant took him by the collar, and scruck him in the face. The defendant was fined five dollars and costs.
